

Q2 2022

Commentary

It is not possible to put a positive spin on the equity markets during the first half of 2022. Throughout the second quarter we saw a continuation of economic themes from the beginning of the year. Inflationary headwinds from unprecedented stimulus, supply chain woes, rising interest rates, conflict in Ukraine, labor shortages, and wage increases, have caused almost every area of the market to suffer. These headwinds have caused economic growth in the U.S. to slow and prompted the Federal Reserve (The Fed) to implement the largest rate hike in 28 years, with the promise to continue to raise rates to curb inflation resulting in deeper recessionary concerns. During the quarter, consumer sentiment was at an all-time low as everyday necessities were at unsustainable prices for most of the population. Going forward, many investors will be keen to understand how The Fed plans to handle the July meeting and beyond in the face of these persistent inflationary pressures. As Investors our patience has been tested and will continue to be tested well into the future as we position ourselves for a landing that may not be as soft as we or The Fed would like. The longer that inflation stays elevated the more likely it becomes that The Fed will have to overtighten monetary policy causing deeper recessionary concerns.

Portfolio Review

The second quarter of 2022 was tough on equity market investors as equity markets continued their unrelenting decline. The Sapphire Star Capital Mid Cap Strategy finished the quarter declining (17.42%) Net, outpacing the Russell Mid Cap Growth Index which declined by (21.43%). Finance, process industries, and technology services sectors comprised the top three sectors in the portfolio, while the portfolio was least weighted in consumer durables, transportation, and utilities sectors. From a holding's perspective LPL Financial Holdings 1.11%, Archer-Daniels-Midland Company 0.47%, and Mueller Industries 0.43% were the top three contributors to performance. Bright Horizons Family Solutions Inc. (36.19%), Matson, Inc. (39.37%) and Copart Inc. (13.40%), were the three holdings that hindered portfolio performance the most. From an attribution perspective, both sector allocation and stock selection aided the relative performance. Holdings in the technology services, finance and energy minerals sectors were the three sectors which aided the portfolio the most. The three sectors that hindered relative performance the most included non-energy minerals, health technology, and consumer non-durables sectors.

Looking Forward

As we look to the second half of the year it seems clear that volatility, uncertainty, and further losses will continue through the end of 2022 and into 2023. It is important to remember that the inflation that caused the stock market to go down will be the same factor that will cause the market to go up. We believe that as soon as there is a feeling that inflation is under control investors will flock back into the market. As we have mentioned in our past commentary, we feel that a good mix of patience, stock selection, and realistic expectations will be the key to navigating the market and protecting capital. As has been the case in the past, the markets begin to anticipate what is going to happen 6 to 9 months in the future and has been pricing in a recession that has yet to come to full blown fruition. We have been in a bear market now for 9 months a lot of liquidity needs to be taken out of the market. In our view, this recession is not all that different from others apart from the excess liquidity that has been provided in the last 4 years which needs to be wrung out. This excess liquidity has been and will continue hampering short term price appreciation in the equity markets. We believe that this will in the longer term, enhance the prospect for equity appreciation and once the excess is gone, we will get back to more rationale price levels in the equity markets at historic equity risk premiums.

As always, we welcome any questions or concerns that you have and thank you for confidence in the Sapphire Star Capital Mid Cap Strategy.
